The North Carolina Bankers Association <sup>[2]</sup> (NCBA), a trade group acting as a legislative liaison at the state and federal level, was formed in July 1897 at a meeting held by the leaders of 22 North Carolina banks. Rocky Mount banker Thomas Hall Battle <sup>[3]</sup> (son of Kemp P. Battle, president of the University of North Carolina <sup>[4]</sup> and state treasurer <sup>[5]</sup>) was the principal organizer. Battle was elected the first president of the NCBA, and Samuel Fox Mordecai <sup>[6]</sup>, dean of the Trinity Law School, served as the association's first general counsel. In 1922 the office of NCBA secretary was made a full-time position, and Raleigh was designated the site of the association's headquarters. The title later was changed to executive secretary, then to executive vice president, and still later to president. The list of those filling this position includes Paul P. Brown (1923-40), Fred W. Greene (1944-50), Jesse A. Helms (1953-60), T. Harry Gatton (1960-81), Alvah D. Fuqua Jr. (1981-86), and Thad Woodard (1997- ).

The NCBA began a unique banking <sup>[7]</sup> education experience in 1937 at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill <sup>[4]</sup>. The first state banking school in the nation, it was widely copied by other banking associations. The North Carolina School of Banking was followed in 1970 by successful efforts to cooperate in establishing the Southeastern Trust School at Campbell University <sup>[8]</sup> in Buies Creek. In 1997 the Community Bankers Association of North Carolina merged with the NCBA; the new organization continued to be known as the NCBA and operated under its original charter. The NCBA offers educational and training programs and other services to its member institutions. The organization also publishes Carolina Banker <sup>[9]</sup> magazine and operates the Community Investment Corporation of North Carolina <sup>[10]</sup>, which provides long-term, low-cost financing for low- to moderate-income, multifamily developments in the state.
