Brunswick County, located in the Coastal Plain ^[6] region of southeastern North Carolina, was formed in 1764 from New Hanover ^[11] and Bladen ^[20] Counties. The county was named after King George I, who was also the duke of Brunswick and Lunenburg. Early inhabitants of Brunswick County included the Cape Fear Indians ^[21], followed by English and French Huguenot ^[22] settlers. The county seat is now (since 1975) Southport ^[23], ^[*] but for most of the county's history, Bolivia (incorporated in 1911) served in that role. Situated along the Atlantic Coast, Brunswick County has some of North Carolina's most accessible and popular ocean communities, including Sunset Beach ^[24], Ocean Isle Beach ^[25], Holden Beach ^[26], and Bald Head Island. Cape Fear lies at the southern tip of Bald Head Island, and the Cape Fear River ^[17] runs along the county's eastern border. The Intracoastal Waterway passes through the county as well.

Brunswick County is home to a number of historic sites, including Orton Plantation and Gardens ^[27], dating to ca. 1730; Bald Head Island Lighthouse ^[28], fondly known as "Old Baldy"; and the Brunswick Inn, built in 1859. Fort Johnston ^[29], completed in 1764, served as a refuge for royal governor Josiah Martin ^[30] in 1775. Brunswick Town/Fort Anderson State Historic Site ^[31] interprets the colonial and Civil War history of the region. Other cultural institutions include the Southport Maritime Museum ^[32], the Brunswick County Historical Society, and the Bald Head Island Conservatory ^[33]. Well-attended annual events in Brunswick County include the North Carolina Fourth of July Festival, the Christmas-by-the-Sea Festival, the North Carolina Festival-by-the-Sea, and the North Carolina Oyster Festival.

Brunswick County agricultural products include tobacco ^[34], vegetables, berries, corn, oats, sweet potatoes, swine ^[35], beef cattle, and poultry; and manufactured products include polyester fibers, children's clothes, lumber, and citric acid. In addition to the beaches that draw millions of vacationers, the county's numerous golf courses are a popular attraction for visitors (as well as a growing number of retirees). Charter boat fishing on the Intracoastal Waterway ^[36] is another important recreational activity in the region. Brunswick County's population was estimated to be 85,000 in 2004.
