

Prompt 1: You have a Saturday job at the local movie rental store and have proven to be a valued employee. However, lately your classmates have been insinuating that it is great that you work at the movie store because it means they could rent movies for free. You see them coming in to the store and know they will ask you for this “favor.” How do you handle this situation? What is your solution to this problem?

Prompt 2: Your job at the local grocery store is so menial and boring you actually dread going to work. But, since you are planning to work for only a month or two, you make the best of the situation. The paychecks from the job are needed to pay for a trip to Colorado this summer. Now your boss, your teacher’s husband, has told you that he has submitted your name for a promotion. If you get the promotion, you will have more responsibility with a small pay increase. You really dislike this job and were counting the days until you had enough money for the trip so you could quit. How do you solve this problem?
